Following the outline below, please describe a mathematics lesson that demonstrates your strengths as a teacher.

1. A brief description of the context of this lesson (course title, school information, student population, curriculum used, etc.)

2. A brief written statement addressing these questions:
 - a. What was the overarching unit in which this lesson was situated, and how does this lesson related to the overarching unit?
 - b. What standards does the lesson address?
 - c. What are the student learning outcomes of the lesson?
 - d. What are students and the instructor doing during different phases of the lesson?
 - e. Was there any technology used for the lesson and if so, how did it contribute to student learning?
 - f. Any other details about the lesson that are notable?

3. Work samples from two different students: one who represents a strong understanding of the material and one who struggled with the material. For each work sample, please write a few sentences addressing the following questions:
 - a. What does the student understand about this topic? Where that is evidenced in her/his work?
 - b. What, if any, misconceptions does the students have about this topic? Where is that evidenced in her/his work?

4. A short reflection on the lesson. Did it accomplish what you hoped it would accomplish? Were you able to challenge your stronger students while still meeting the needs of your struggling students? What will you do differently if/when you teach this lesson again?

Feel free to attach any supplemental materials used (worksheets, assessments, handouts, etc.).

You and a colleague(s) at your school site must work together to propose, design, and orchestrate a project that will bring about improved student outcomes at your school. This proposed project will be the centerpiece of your work as an MfA Los Angeles Fellow for five years, so please think carefully about what you want to accomplish.

Each team must submit a description of a proposed project that addresses the following questions (a single proposal, co-written by the team):

1. What specific challenge or area of improvement in your school/district do you want to address? Why is this challenge significant?
2. What attempts have been made in the past to solve this or similar challenges, perhaps at other schools and districts?
3. How do you propose to solve these challenges? How will student outcomes be improved by your proposed work? What mathematics education research backs up or informs your proposed solution?
4. Which students will benefit from these improvements?
5. What are some concrete ways of measuring whether your proposed solution is successful? (At least some part of your answer to this question should involve student performance assessments.)
6. What resources will you need to be successful?
7. How are your proposed improvements aligned with your school's curricula, standards, practices, and culture?
8. How do you think your proposed improvements should be rolled out at your school? Can your ideas be shared across your district?
9. How will your proposed work continue to be effective after your five-year fellowship is over?
10. Why do you think that what you and your colleague(s) do will be successful?

Project proposals will be scrutinized for evidence of a deep concern for students' learning and of personal growth as a result of prior professional development opportunities. Applicants will need to demonstrate that their school administration will define clear roles for them related to the improvement projects they will design and implement, and will provide them with the support, time, and resources necessary to be successful. Applicants' proposed improvement projects will be judged on their appropriateness, potential for improvements in student performance, alignment with school and district standards, thoughtfulness of design, and potential for sustainable change. Priority will be given to projects that benefit all students, not just students who are already talented in mathematics.

We strongly encourage all applicants to speak with their school administration and colleagues in their department(s) to come up with compelling projects that will have school and departmental support.

Please type up your improvement project, and include any supporting documents, research, or materials. Your project narrative should not be more than 10 typed pages.
